the house. The roof of this porch is supported by columns; there may be an arch or two. The roof may be peaked. The porch (corredor), and perhaps also the house, has a brick floor. There are several windows; some of these contain iron grilles. The walls are plastered and perhaps tinted.

However mean or however important, the house is ornamented by a number of flowering plants, usually potted in oilcans, and stood outside the house on a rack.

The tripartite house division into sala, kitchen and storehouse, emphasized by Bandelier[2] and well illustrated by Starr,[3] is not always clearly marked. Sometimes the kitchen is merely a flimsy lean-to against the house, or is in a corner of the corredor, or is even in a corner of the single room. But more often it is a separate room or even an entirely separate structure.

The storehouse (S. troje)[1] is practically always present, and is usually placed immediately in front of the dwelling. It occurs in three forms, all of which are probably of entirely pre-Columbian design. The ohuatlapil (N. ohuatlapilli) is most common. This is circular, about six feet high and of varying diameter; it is made of vertical cornstalks bound together with rope. It contains maize on the cob (S. mazorca). Also made to contain mazorca is the cincolote (N. zincolohtli). This is square, of poles laid horizontally, one pair upon
